Amanda is an experienced senior litigator. She acts in complex multi-party commercial and class action litigation, and works with clients and lawyers from other jurisdictions in multi-jurisdictional cases. She defends professionals in licensing-related complaints. She has argued at all levels of courts in Saskatchewan and the Supreme Court of Canada, and arbitral and administrative tribunals.

Overview

Amanda is a well-recognized senior litigator in Saskatchewan. She was inducted as a Fellow in the American College of Trial Lawyers in 2025.

- "Amanda Quayle is considered a 'terrific and very knowledgeable' litigator and wins recognition for her work in commercial litigation and class action defence ...", 2018 Chambers Canada
- "Amanda Quayle is a class action expert.", 2025 Chambers Canada
- "Amanda is highly skilled at foreseeing the way that disputes will unfold and what our best course of action is in the circumstances. She is very responsive and has excellent attention to detail.", 2025 Chambers Canada

Amanda's class action defence experience is extensive:

- She acted in the successful defence of the first class action started in Saskatchewan.

- She regularly acts for defendants in class actions involving pharmaceuticals, medical products and other product liability claims, data/privacy breaches, and anti-competitive conduct claims.

Amanda has significant professional discipline and administrative law experience:

- She defends professionals against complaints by their regulators, including lawyers, pharmacists, psychologists, licensed practical nurses, insurance brokers, and respiratory therapists.
 - She is counsel to discipline committees hearing complaints against professionals.
 - She challenges unfair and unreasonable decisions of administrative tribunals for clients in the courts.
